Joe Dassin was born in New York City in 1938 to American film director Jules Dassin (of Ukrainian and Polish-Jewish extraction) and Beatrice Launer, a New York-born violinist. After his father fell victim to the Hollywood blacklist in 1950, he and his family moved from place to place across Europe. Joe studied at the International School of Geneva and the Institut Le Rosey in Switzerland but graduated in Grenoble, France and moved back to the USA to earn a Master of Arts in Anthropology in 1963. He went back to France to work as a technician for his father, also acting in supporting roles in several movies. In 1964 he signed with CBS Records making him the first French singer to sign up with an American record label. By the early 1970s his songs were on top of the charts in France where he had become immensely popular. He married Maryse Massiera in Paris in 1966 but the couple lost a baby a few days after his premature birth and the marriage did not survive. In 1978 he married Christine Delvaux, with whom he had two sons but soon after Joe died of a heart attack, at age 51, during a vacation to Tahiti.
