Roger Whittaker was born in Nairobi, Kenya on March 22, 1936. His parents hailed originally from Staffordshire in England. The music of East Africa left a mark on Roger's childhood. After spending his childhood and teenage in Africa, Roger arrived in Britain in 1959 to attend the University of Bangor in Wales where he studied zoology, biochemistry, and marine biology. However, in East Africa, Roger had started to sing and entertain in local clubs, and he was by now writing his own songs so when he was approached to compose some songs to sing in the Rag Show, he made a demo track that found its way to a major music publisher. This is how his first single "The Charge of the Light Brigade" was published. Roger's second release, "Steel Men," started to pick up radio air play while he was sitting his exams. In 1964, Roger met his future wife, Natalie, and joined the British team that won the competition at the annual music festival at Knokke, Belgium, singing "If I Were a Rich Man," and his own composition "Mexican Whistler". Suddenly, Roger was inundated with offers to tour Europe and star on the major television programs. For the next 35 years, Roger never stopped traveling all around the world and his songs were hits everywhere. 2001 saw a grueling German tour again, at the end of which an exhausted Roger celebrated his 65th Birthday and announced that he would stop touring completely. However, having moved to Ireland and settled down by the River Shannon, he was soon inspired to start writing again, and needless to say, like all artists missed the roar of the crowds. So in 2003 he again toured Germany to great acclaim, recorded a new German Christmas album and released an English album as well with many of his old songs so frequently requested by his fans.
